James A. Joseph, M. Div., Emeritus Professor of the Practice of Public Policy at the Sanford School of Public Policy, and Leader in Residence, Hart Leadership Program, Duke University; Former U.S. Ambassador to South Africa

STUDENT WORKSHOP: Global Citizenship: Being, Knowing, and Doing
Thursday, March 27, 2014
3:30pm - 4:30pm
Shaw Residence Hall, Tillman-Smart Room
Ambassador James A. Joseph will draw from his distinguished experiences to discuss the civic values, knowledge, and habits of global citizenship that inform the modern idea of a civil society. Dr. Joseph will also examine what we can be, know and do to engage in social change that seeks to go beyond addressing the consequences and eliminate the cause of social ills.

KEYNOTE ADDRESS: Values, Knowledge, and Habits: A Civically Engaged World
Thursday, March 27, 2014
Reception: 5:00pm
Keynote: 6:00pm
School of Education Building Room 118
Ambassador James A. Joseph will explore three central components for developing, nurturing, and sustaining global engagement: the values of civic responsibility, the knowledge to understand new populations groups in an interdependent world, and the habits of the university that can contribute to the public good. Dr. Joseph will address the civic engagement of the university both locally and globally through three powerful metaphors, being, knowing and doing.

The UNCG Community Engagement Series is sponsored by the UNCG Office of the Provost, Institute for Community & Economic Engagement, Office of Research & Economic Development, Office of Leadership and Service-Learning, HHS Office of Community Engagement, Peace & Conflict Studies Department, Faculty Teaching & Learning Commons, and the Interior Architecture Department
